

The Indian National Flag

The Indian National Flag is a symbol of pride, unity, and sovereignty. Called the 'Tiranga', it consists of three horizontal stripes: saffron on top, white in the middle, and green at the bottom.

Saffron stands for courage and sacrifice, white symbolizes peace and truth, while green represents faith and fertility. In the center is the navy-blue Ashoka Chakra with 24 spokes.

The Chakra signifies the eternal wheel of law. It's inspired by the Lion Capital of Ashoka, one of India's historical emblems.

The flag was officially adopted on July 22, 1947, days before India gained independence from British rule.

The Flag Code of India governs its usage. It must always be treated with respect. Disrespecting it is a punishable offense under Indian law.

National days like Independence Day and Republic Day witness widespread hoisting of the flag, evoking patriotism among the people.

The flag not only symbolizes our independence struggle but also our democratic values and national pride. It inspires every citizen to serve the nation sincerely.
